Most people get acne when they are in their early teens, and some unfortunate people have it until they are well into adulthood. For those who are not afflicted, acne is not a few pimples or whiteheads. It is a serious skin condition that affects many people. Of course there are pimples, but there are also whiteheads, blackheads, a rash, bleeding, pus, and even cysts. People with severe acne can be scarred severely for life.

An acne scar remover is needed for acne sufferers to lead normal lives again. Until recently, there were no reliable acne scar removal products on the market, and people with substantial scarring suffered from it forever. Now, however, products that remove acne scars come in different forms and there is one for almost any kind of scarring.

If you are on a budget, the quickest, easiest, and most inexpensive type of product is an at home chemical peel kit that you can purchase at a store or online. For most mild acne scars, this is sufficient. It is painless and begins to fade the scars within a few weeks.

For more severe scars, you can have a chemical peel done by a doctor or skin care technician. These are usually more harsh and more expensive than the at home chemical peels. For more severe types of scarring, including cysts and craters, you may choose from laser procedures or even skin grafting. Both of these are highly successful, even on the worst acne scars.
