Techniques in Using Makeup to Cover Up Scars

There are a number of different types of makeup techniques that can be utilized to cover up those pox and acne scars. Makeup like this won't treat your scars just yet, but they are a quick fix when you need how to cover up acne scars.

- 1. Foundation: Applied over the face in a thin layer, foundation with a solid color match to your skin can help cover up scars. It is blotted onto the skin with a sponge to get the best coverage without discoloration.
- 2. Concealer: Easily one of the best strategies for makeup to cover pox scars and acne scars, concealers should be applied after putting on foundation to prevent visible discolorations. It is applied around areas that contain the scars should reduce their overall appearance; just be sure to get a concealer that is the best match for your skin tone.
- 3. Highlighting: This will involve using a light, often shiny powder to cover certain parts of the face. The goal of highlighting is to draw attention to positive features, and away from the areas you want to conceal. Highlighting works best when applied on the inside portion of the eyelid, right under the eyebrows, and at the top portion of the cheekbone.
- 4. Accenting: Similar to highlighting, this technique accents the user's top facial features, such as wearing bold lipstick if you have great lips, or using eyeliner and eye shadow to accent beautiful eyes. This technique draws attention away from spots you want to conceal, turning seemingly non-skin related products into makeup that cover pox scars and acne scars.
